If your pantry doesn't inspire dreams of a Mediterranean vacation, it may be time for a food overhaul. Adding Mediterranean staples to your non-perishable food storage can increase the flavor and nutrition of your family meals. Jarred, dried, cured and fermented foods have a long shelf life, ensuring your kitchen will always be stocked with the quick, nourishing meals found on Greek seaports and Italian farms.

The Mediterranean diet offers diverse foods, making it easy to go Medi with your pantry staples. Traditionally, the daily menu is plant-based with fish, shellfish, poultry, eggs and dairy eaten in small portions throughout the week.

Vegetables, beans, cooking grains, cereals, breads, nuts, seeds, fruits and olive oil dominate the Mediterranean eating style. These foods offer ready-to-go ingredients for dozens of flavorful meals and appetizers.

Staples can be categorized into protein, fiber (grains, vegetables and fruit) and flavor-boosting ingredients. Mix and match categories to create wholesome appetizers, side dishes and meals. The word "diet" evokes hassles, failures and eating restrictions, but foods from the Mediterranean offer balanced, flavorful, nutrient-rich eating. This way of cooking embraces the original meaning of "diet" as the daily habit of eating for pleasure, meals with family and friends, and making time to appreciate food. And even on busy days, it's good to know you can rely on your pantry full of Mediterranean goodness to support your wellbeing with stress-free, satisfying meals. ■
